The Vice-President declared the United States navy would not only be made the greatest navy in the world but would be strong enough to resist the combined navies of all nations. He explained these were his personal views.

TRI-STATE FAIR IS SUGGESTED

Southwest Georgia and Northwest Florida, as well as Southeast Alabama, should have part in Annual Fair held in this city.

Make it the Dothan Tri-State Fair!

Now that it is all over except the shouting why not have the Southeast Alabama Fair Association take in portions of Southwest Georgia and Northwest Florida for another year?

That portion of prolific territory east of Dothan as the grow files and across the State line, also to the Southward into the land of Ponce de Leon and flowers, belongs proper to Dothan. It is legitimate Dothan trade territory, and its citizens are thrifty and progressive.

True, some parts of the section mentioned have not been developed as extensively as the next few years will mark, but as Dothan is the Metropolis of Southeast Alabama also is Dothan the metropolis of those allied communities.

The Dothan Fair, as it has been called, in the words of the immortal poet, was a "howling success," and in a year of undoubted financial depression due to the European conflict and the low price of cotton.

If the Southeast Alabama Fair Association is a success under abnormal conditions what would it be under normal conditions? No doubt President Porter and Secretary Thomas have asked themselves this question often. The directors and stockholders have dwelt upon the theme. It has perhaps gripped the mind of the most indifferent individual.

Now looking the year 1915 squarely in the face, one cannot help but be impressed with the fact possibilities of such an enterprise, because hard times cannot last in this land; business and order will surely be improved, and the balance, if it did take a sudden contrary drop, will certainly rise again.

The war dogs of Europe may bark until the heavens weep, until the world pities the carnage, even were it that it does not, but cotton will

FINE FIDDLERS FROLIC PLANNED

City Clerk Linsley and Chief of Police Rollins believe a fiddlers' convention should be held Christmas week.

Whether enough interest is aroused to launch a gala festival for Christmas week, it is safe to predict that a fiddlers' convention will be held during that period.

Chief of Police C. J. Rollins and City Clerk R. W. Linsley, both of whom ably assisted in making the fiddlers' convention a great success last year, believe that a similar program can be carried out this year. They may take the matter in hand and see it through to a successful culmination.

The city is building up a reputation for its gala days, and it is not likely that the fiddlers' convention will be allowed to pass unnoted this season, because of temporary financial depression.

must have cotton; and the South will prosper for the world must have what the South can so well produce. After the first year or two of depression the South will prosper under the diversification system. It should not take more than two winters to become accustomed to the changed conditions.

In the meantime a greater territory will be developed, not only medically, it is true, but also in the Dothan is the center of the vast fertile land; Dothan should prosper nearly to do her part.

Since this year's fair the papers of Southeast Alabama have been complimenting Dothan upon the first show, and this city will continue to receive the support of the country weeklies if these papers are treated with the courtesy the press demands and must have.

The merchants of Dothan would welcome the plan to have a Tri-State Fair in Dothan and would be found at the forefront of the movement, doing their share to make the fair a great success.

The procession line of Dothan, as did the merchants, will contribute their share to make a successful show. Dothan is the center of the vast fertile land; Dothan should prosper nearly to do her part.

difficult work for Florence. She was like a child who did not bestow it on her. She had given her friend, the Russian, the first real big in her life, and she had been disfigured. But if she could act, so could she; and her acting was the more she could smile and just, all the while her heart was beating with wrath.

One week or so after her return with Norton in the summer Olga arrived, beautifully handsome as ever. There was the least touch of the adventure in her makeup. Florence had received some mail, and she had the letters on the library table in the countess's room. She had opened them but had not yet looked at their contents.

They were chatting pleasantly about recent things, when the maid came and asked Florence to come to Susan's room for a moment. Susan excused herself, wondering Susan could want. She forgot as she was gone the countess said that Jones was not Turkish; picked up the letters and examined their contents; and then she found this remarkable document: "Dear daughter I never seen: I must turn the page over to you. Meet me at the summer house. Tell me my life is in danger. Your love."

The countess could have laughed. She saw this man Paroff's and here was the chance to be humiliated and send him packing to his cold and miserable home. She had made up once as a countess, and she could easily do so again. The only thing that troubled her was the fact that she did not know whether Florence had read the letter

There Was Not the Least Touch of the Adventures in Her Makeup.

Thus, she did not dare destroy the first thought of changing check; then she concluded to drop it exactly where she found it and to look for it.

When Florence returned she explained that her absence had been due to a trifling household affair. The Russian: "I come primarily to ask you to tea tomorrow, where I can see you. If you like, you may ask Norton to go along. I begin to love that you two are rather fond of each other."

Mr. Norton is just a valuable asset," returned Florence with a smile that deceived the other. "I shall be glad to go to the tea. But I don't promise to dance. I am not with Mr. Norton?" archly. "Reporters never dance themselves; they make others dance instead."

"I shall have to tell that," declared the countess; and she laughed quite merrily.

"I have said something witty to you have; and it is not only witty but truthful. I'm afraid you're not as good as the rest of us have any more."

"My Child!" Whispered the Man.

would not write. Ah, when would she see that father of hers, so mysterious, always hovering near, always unseen?

It must have been an amusing adventure for the countess. To steal into the summer house and wait there, not knowing if Florence had advised Jones or the reporter. If caught, she had her excuses. Paroff, the confident, however, appeared shortly after.

"My child!" whispered the man. And Olga stifled a laugh; but to him it sounded like a sob.

"I am worn out," he said. "I am tired of the game of hide and seek." "You will not have to play the game long," thought Olga.

"The money is hidden in my office down town. And we must go there at once. When we return we will pack up and leave for Europe. I've longed to see you so!"

"You poor fool! And they sent you to supersede Leo!" she mused. She played out the farce to the very end. She permitted herself to be plied and jugged; and for what unnecessary roughness she suffered at the hands of Paroff he would presently pay. He took her straight to the executive chamber of the Black Hundred and pushed her into the room, exclaiming triumphantly:

"Here is Hargrave's daughter!" "Indeed!" said Olga, throwing back her veil and standing revealed in her mask.

"Olga!" cried Braine, laughing. And that was the inglorious end of the secret agent from Russia.

CHAPTER XIV.

Norton Makes a Discovery. Perhaps the most amusing phase of the secret agent's discomfiture was the fact that neither Jones nor Florence had the least idea what had happened. Florence regretted a hundred times during the evening that she had not gone out to the summer house. It might really have been her father. Her regret grew so deep in her that just before going to bed she confessed to Jones.

"You received a letter of that sort and did not show it to me?" said Jones, astonished.

"You warned me never to pay any attention to them."

"No; I warned you never to act upon them without first consulting me. And we might have made a capture! My child, always show me these things. I will advise you whether to tear them up or not."

"Jones, I believe you are going a little too far," said Florence haughtily. "It might have been my father."

"Never in this world, Miss Florence. Still, I beg your pardon for raising my voice. What I do and have done is only for your own sake. There are two things I wish to impress upon your mind before I go. This can be made a comedy or a terrible tragedy. You have already had a taste of the latter; and each time you escaped because God was good to us. But he is rarely kind to thoughtless people. They have to look out for themselves. I am acting under orders; always remember that."

"Forgive me; I acted wrongly. But I'm so weary and tired of this eternal suspicion of everybody and everything. Can't I go somewhere, some place where I can have rest?"

"If I thought for a single moment it was possible to take you thousands of miles from this spot, it would be done this very night. But this is our fortress. So far it has been impenetrable. The police are watching it; and that protects a general assault by the second. If we tried to leave we would be followed; and they play that game exceedingly well. Now, good-night. We'll have you out of all this doubt and suspicion one of these days. There will not be any part that will be topped off as you'd log a limb from a tree."

"Please let it be quick. I want to see my father."

Jones' eyes sparkled. "And you have my word that he wants to see you. But I dare not tell you."

"Do you think he would object to Mr. Norton?" she asked, studying the rug.

"In what capacity?" he countered, forcing her hand.

"As—as a husband?" bravely. Jones in turn studied the patterns in the rug. "It is only natural for a father to look high for his daughter's husband. But, after all, an honest man is worth as much as anything I know of. And Norton is honest and loyal and brave."

"Thank you, Jones. I intend to marry him when the time comes; so you may as well prepare father for this eventuality."

"There is an old adage—" "If you have a new adage, Jones, I shouldn't mind hearing it. But I'm only just out of school, where old adages are served from soup to pudding. Good-night."

And Jones went to the rear of the house, chuckling.

In the passing it might well be observed that the Hargrave house had a remarkable menage. There was a gardener, a cook, and a maid; and the three of them reported to Jones each night before going to bed. They were all three detectives from one of the greatest organizations in America.

Finding themselves unable to lure Florence away from the environs of the Hargrave home, the Black Hundred set some new machinery in motion. They proposed to rid the house of every one in it by a perfectly logical device. But the first step in this new move was going to be extremely delicate and risky. It was no small adventure to enter the Hargrave home; and yet this must be done. So finally "Spider" Beggs was selected for the work. The man could practically walk over crockery without causing a sound; he could climb a house by the window ledges; and he could hold his breath like those professional tank swimmers.

Three or four nights after the Paroff fiasco, Jones started the rounds, putting out the lights. He left the one in the hall (ill, the last, for it was his habit, after having turned off that light, to stand by the door for several minutes, watching. One never could tell.

On the other hand, "Spider" Beggs never approached a house till an hour after the lights went out. Persons were likely to move about for some minutes later; they might want something to eat, a drink of water. So he remained hidden behind the summer house till long after midnight. When at last he felt assured that all in the Hargrave house were asleep, he moved out cautiously. Both his future and his pocketbook depended upon the success of this venture. It took him ten minutes to crawl from the summer house to the veranda, and to have detected this approach Jones, had he been watching, would have needed a searchlight. Beggs hugged the lattice work for another ten minutes and then drew himself up and wriggled to one of the windows. Here was an operation that needed all his care and skill; to lift this window without sound. But he was an old hand and windows with ordinary locks were playthings under his deft touch. He raised the window, stepped over the sill into the library, and crouched down. He did not close the window; house thieves never do. They leave windows and doors open, because sooner or later they have to make their escape that way.

Presently he stood up, rubbed his eyes, and then he looked at the three volumes. These held a thousand in excellent counterfeit.

"Mighty good work that. What are you going to do?" asked the reporter.

Jones rubbed his chin reflectively. "How long may a counterfeiter be sent up?"

"Anywhere from ten to twenty years."

"That will serve. My boy, this time we'll go and take Mr. Black Hundred right in his cubby hole."

"You know where it is?"

"Every nook and corner of it. Now you go at once to the chief of the local branch of the secret service and put the matter to him frankly. I, Florence, Susan, and the rest of us must be arrested. The wretches must believe that the house is empty. They'll move about fruitlessly and will return to their den to report the success of the coup. All the while you and some detectives will be in hiding upstairs, dictograph and all that. When the time comes you will follow. This will not reach the heads, perhaps, but it will demoralize the organization in such a way as to make it helpless for several months to come. There is a tunnel from the stables to this house."

"What a tunnel?"

"Yes, Mr. Hargrave had it built several years ago. I don't know what his idea was; possibly he anticipated an event like this. You and your men will find entrance by this method. It can be done without exciting the suspicions of the watchers."

"Looks as if my yarn wasn't going to be delayed so long after all. Jones, you ought to have been in the secret service yourself," admiringly.

Jones smiled and shrugged. "I am perfectly satisfied with my lot—or would be if the Black Hundred could be wiped out of existence."

"I'll see the secret service people at once. I stand in well with them all."

"And good luck to you. We'll need good luck."

Norton was welcomed cordially by the chief. The secret service men trusted him and told him lots of tales that never saw light on the printed page. The reporter went directly to the point of his story, without elaboration, and the chief smiled and handed him a key. "Go on, and be careful. The house is guarded by a day or two; at least not till after the night is cold. I'm beginning to see traps everywhere."

"Nonsense! Leave it to me. We shall stick our heads inside the Hargrave house till we are dead certain that it is absolutely empty. Olga placed toward them. He then selected three or four volumes, opened them at random and laid out packets of money between the leaves. It was not real money, but only a bank check could have told that. This done, he moved toward the window again.

"Stop!" said Jones quietly. "Spider" Beggs gasped. It was no unexpected; but at the same time almost instinctively he plunged headlong through the window, and the bullet which followed snipped a lock of his hair. He threw himself off the veranda and scurried across the lawn, signing fashion. But no more bullets followed.

Jones turned on the lights and investigated the room, but he could not find anything disturbed, and naturally came to the conclusion that the intruder had been interrupted before he had begun his work. He turned off the lights and sat up the major part of the night. Nothing more happened. Florence came down, but he sent her back to bed, explaining that some one had attempted to enter the house and he had taken a shot at him.

"Spider" Beggs had a letter to write. He was in high feather. He had tackled a difficult job and had come away without a scratch. But he had the misfortune to write his letter to the secret service officials in a hotel often frequented by Norton. And so Jim, on finishing his own letter, blotted it and casually glanced at the blotter. A single word caught his eye. Being an alert newspaper man, always on the hunt for stories, he examined the blotter with care. It was an easy matter for him to read writing backward, having fooled away many an hour in the composing rooms. The word which had awakened the reporter's sense in him was "counterfeit." He held the blotter toward the mirror and read enough to satisfy himself that the Black Hundred had become active once more. And this was one of the best ideas they had yet conceived.

Hargrave had always been something of a mystery to his neighbors. Where he had lived in other days was unknown; neither had any one the remotest idea from what sources his riches had been obtained. And nothing was known of Jones or the daughter. It was a very shrewd method of clearing every one out of the house and leaving it to be examined at leisure. And he had fallen upon this thing; he, Norton, all because his tailor had written him a sharp note about his bill and he had been provoked to reply in kind! Counterfeit money. There was quite a flurry these days over certain issues of spurious paper. It was so good that only experts could detect it. There were two plates, one for a ten and another for a twenty. For a while he was pulled between duty and love. Well, it would only add another interesting chapter to the general story when he published it. He started out to Riverside to acquaint Jones with the discovery.

"Humph!" said Jones. "Not a bad idea this. So that's what the sneak was doing here last night. I've been wondering and wondering. Let's have a look."

He went through the books and at length came across the three volumes. These held a thousand in excellent counterfeit.

"Mighty good work that. What are you going to do?" asked the reporter.

Jones rubbed his chin reflectively. "How long may a counterfeiter be sent up?"

"Anywhere from ten to twenty years."

"That will serve. My boy, this time we'll go and take Mr. Black Hundred right in his cubby hole."

will bother us for awhile. The Paroff will not dare tell how he was humiliated. The least he can do to save his own skin is to say that we are fully capable of taking care of our selves."

Olga laughed. "To think of his writing a note like that! Florence would have recognized—and no doubt did—a palpable attempt to play an old game twice."

"How does she act towards you?" "Cordial as ever; and yet . . ."

"Yet what?" "I thought her an ordinary school girl, and yet every once in a while she makes what you billiard players call a professional shot. What matter? So long as they do not shut the door in my face, I ask nothing more. But do you want my opinion? I feel it in my bones that something will go wrong tomorrow."

"Norton, I've been after this gang of counterfeiters for months and they are clever beyond words. I've never been able to get anywhere near their premises. And for a moment I thought this note was from a squealer. I've a dozen men scouring the country. They find the bogus notes, but never the men who pass them. You see, it's a new stuff. I know what all the old timers are at; but none of them has had a hand in this issue. Some foreigners, I take it, under the leadership of a man I'd very much like to know. Now, what's your scheme?"

Jim outlined it briefly.

"It all depends," said the chief, "upon the fact that they will be impatient. If they have the ability to wait, we lose. But we can afford to risk the chance. The man who wrote this letter is not a counterfeiter. He's an old yeggman. We haven't heard anything of him lately. We tried to corner him on a post office job, but he slipped by. He may be a stool. Anyhow, I'll draw him in somehow."

"There'll be some excitement."

"We're used to that; you too. All we've got to do is to locate this man Beggs. There are signs of spite in this letter. Very well played, if you want my opinion. What's this Black Hundred?"

"I'm not at liberty to tell just yet. It's a strange game; half political, half blackmail. It's a pretty strong organization. But if they're back of this counterfeiting, there's a fine chance of landing them all."

Here the chief's assistant came in. "Got Beggs on the wire. Says he'll conduct you to the home if you'll promise him immunity for some other offenses."

"Tell him he shall have immunity on the word of the chief. But also say that he must come to see me in person."

"All right, sir."

"I don't believe it would be wise for Beggs to see me here. I gave him a good send-off—Sins Bling—five years ago. He may recollect," said Norton.

"Hull yourself about that. Only keep in communication with me by telephone and I'll tip you off as to when the raid shall take place. Lucky you came in. I should have honestly gone there and arrested innocent people, and they would have had a devil of a time explaining. It would have taken them at least a week to clear themselves. That would leave the house empty all that time."

Norton did not reply, but he put the blotter away carefully. There was no getting away from the fact, but the god of luck was with him.

"Do you know what's back of it all?"

"I can't tell you any more than I have," said Norton.

"Then I pass. I know you well enough. If you've made up your mind not to talk, a man couldn't get anything out of you with a saw-saw. And that's why we trust you, spy boy. Don't forget the telephone."

"I shan't. So long."

That same night Braine paid the Russian woman a brief visit.

"I think that here's where we go forward. The secret service will raid the house tomorrow and then for a few days we'll roam about as we please. I'm hanged if I don't have every plank torn up and all the walls pulled down. More and more I'm convinced that the money is in that house."

"Don't be too confident," warned Olga. "So many times have we been tripped up when everything seemed in our hands. The house should be guarded but not entered for a day or two; at least not till after the night is cold. I'm beginning to see traps everywhere."

"Nonsense! Leave it to me. We shall stick our heads inside the Hargrave house till we are dead certain that it is absolutely empty. Olga will bother us for awhile. The Paroff will not dare tell how he was humiliated. The least he can do to save his own skin is to say that we are fully capable of taking care of our selves."

Olga laughed. "To think of his writing a note like that! Florence would have recognized—and no doubt did—a palpable attempt to play an old game twice."

"How does she act towards you?" "Cordial as ever; and yet . . ."

"Yet what?" "I thought her an ordinary school girl, and yet every once in a while she makes what you billiard players call a professional shot. What matter? So long as they do not shut the door in my face, I ask nothing more. But do you want my opinion? I feel it in my bones that something will go wrong tomorrow."

A DUTCH JOURNALIST'S EXPERIENCE IN WAR ZONE

The Hague, Nov. 7.—A well known Dutch journalist who has just returned from a tour through Alsace-Lorraine and right through to the German lines before Verdun, gives in Het Leven some interesting pictures of the position on the German frontier and at the front. Particularly significant is what he writes regarding the admitted superiority of the French artillery and the clever ruses they adopt. He writes:

"I proceeded by train to Metzland thence set off by motor, with an Ober-Lieutenant as an escort, to visit the fighting line. Across the French frontier and on past Lunenburg and Woerwe we met an ever-increasing number of infantry, artillery and transport columns and the further we went the busier became the scene.

"German officers to whom I spoke in this neighborhood were by no means satisfied over the progress of affairs; there was no progress to be noted, principally because the French artillery had proved itself superior to the German. The French seem to have dragged their heavy guns out of the fortresses and to have placed them in the open field. Moreover, it is asserted that the French artillery can reach at least two kilometers farther than that of the Germans."

"We passed on by St. Hilaire and Buzenville to Harville, where we were only 12 kilometers from the great fortress of Verdun, whose guns were sending out their terrible messengers of death. Not far from that point was a magnificent battery of 30 centimetre motor howitzers. It was not allowed to approach it, but German officers told me that the Austrians had suffered terrible losses. The French shells raked even the best sheltered positions—a fact which gave the Austrians much food for thought. At last they found the solution. In a tree close to their battery, they found a Frenchman armed with a field telephone who promptly informed Verdun of any change in the position of the Austrian guns. The brave Frenchman was given short shift. But the instance does not stand alone. Repeatedly have the Germans found country people in trees, and in cellars, all with pocket telephones.

"The Germans have made such actions almost impossible now, but still they admit they are not by a long way where they would like to be. Everywhere I heard in Germany officers and soldiers alike speaking with great joy of the fall of the Fort de Camp des Romains. Now at last there was a gap in the line of forts. At the fighting line itself I heard a very different story. Yes, they had taken the fort and the Bavarian soldiers had acted magnificently, but whether they could hold the fort was another question. The French guns in the forts of Paroches and Louville were so excellent that they completely covered the Camp des Romains and the gap was no gap at all."

LESSON TEXT.

1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

3. For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.

4. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he give rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.

5. For every man shall bear his own burden.

6. Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

7. Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

8. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

9. And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

10. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

The Best Decorators Now Advise Plain Walls

Many of the high priced metropolitan decorators have declared in favor of "flat" finishes, that is, plain, dull colors—for they are more restful, more refining, more harmonious. If you use you get all the advantages of water colors, and have a washable, durable wall finish, that will not fade, crack, peel or become stained, on walls, ceiling, wood or metal work in private homes or public buildings. It is cheap and very economical. Let us show you our large book of color combinations—and all our low priced "High Standard" Products.

First Reductions

AUTUMN 1914 WEARING APPAREL

The rule followed by the big city stores in marking up their Suits and Dresses is—first add the cost of doing business—ranging from 25% to 35% for city stores—to invoice cost, then add 100% to 200% for profit.

This difference in profit is determined by the looks of the garment. When their half price sales are put on about the middle of the season, it represents goods bought on the road from traveling men in May and June and in market during July and August.

Goods are invariably higher early in the season than later. We did not buy our Suits and Dresses this season until September. Our styles are newer for this reason, and prices a great deal cheaper.

As we do not mark the big percentage of profit on our Ready-to-wear garments that these city stores do, we cannot cut our price half in the midst of the season, as they do.

Their half price sales are about the same as our regular prices. When we offer any reductions at all we are far below their half price sales. At the same time people expect us to make reductions simultaneously with these city stores. This, coupled with the business depression prevailing, causes us to offer

FORGIVING.

One did another wrong, and lo,
Hold your hand and tongue.
The echo of it is in his breast
Hang clear and strong,
And never would be stilled by sleep,
Nor slain,
But o'er rang on, a bold, discordant strain.

At last the evil deed went
With brave man's might,
And proved forgiveness, that the wrong
Be made right.

"Why friend," the wronged one,
smiling answered low,
"Forgive" I have forgotten long ago."

And so both evil overcame,
Winning the breast
Where it had birth and being first
And held her best.

And he is best, while whose mind
Remembering and forgetting are controlled.

Cut flowers and ferns adorned the living and dining rooms. Sandwiches and ginger ale were served at the conclusion of the program.

Roll Call was answered by "Interesting Facts about the Early Kings."

Papers by Mrs. T. M. Barnett on "Anglo-Saxon Prose and Poetry," and by Mrs. J. Ray Jones on "Alfred the Great," were well written and immensely enjoyed.

Composite Story of Saxon and Danish England told in Topics, was interestingly told by Mrs. Heard Saxon.

A beautiful vocal solo by Mrs. L. G. Y. Baker closed the program.

Reception in Honor of Visitors.

One of the most beautiful courtesies of the early winter season, was that of the afternoon reception, with which Mrs. Lillian Crawford honored her house guest, Miss Frances Conn of Milledgeville, Ga., on Friday afternoon.

The afternoon was a perfect one and the home a bower of flowers. In the reception hall, vases of Killarney roses were effectively used against a blue background of ferns. In the parlor, where the guests were received, pink Killarney roses lent their beauty and fragrance. In the receiving line were the hostess, the honor guest, Miss Curry of Bainbridge, Ga., and Mrs. Myrtle West.

Mrs. Crawford wore a becoming costume of white charmuse with silver passementerie. Miss Conn wore a handsome gown of white brocade crepe meteor with shadow lace, Miss Curry, yellow crepe meteor and Mrs. West, pink charmuse.
